BIG ROUNDHOUSE

Improved Equipment of Building Recently Erected at Waterbury.

The great, big brick roundhouse that the New Haven road has put down in South Brooklyn, at the Meriden Junction, has been in operation long enough to make everybody who has seen it with the railroad business in Waterbury feel that it's going to be a success, says The American.

The roundhouse is a massive affair, and railroaders say it ought to be pointed out to visitors as one of the notable sights of the city.

In comparison with the old roundhouse, which was a small, old-fashioned building, the new building takes a stand all by itself. Not only does it contain a "resting room" for the engines that have been puffing and pulling for miles, but it also has a little hotel-like lodging house, where the tired trainmen come in and register, take the bunk assigned to them, and get a sleep.

Among the rooms are the locker room, where 99 steel lockers are the chief feature; toilet rooms, an oil room, storeroom, general foreman's office, register room for engineers, engine room, boiler room, machine room, tool room, all of which are on one ground floor, the building being only one story in height. There is also a bunk room on the ground floor, where the trainmen sleep.

The office of the general foreman, Peter Collins, is a well equipped room. There is a big cabinet containing lockers for filing reports of various kinds. The room is attractively furnished and presents a cozy appearance.

In the engine room there is space for ten engines at a time.
